NEWCASTLE MEMORIAL WALK (Walking required)

The Newcastle Memorial Walk was constructed to commemorate the centenary of ANZAC. The original concept for the project was a one-way walk along the cliff top with visitors having to turn around at the viewing platform and return the way they came via Strzelecki lookout. While this still would have been a remarkable project, the addition of the stairway to connect the walk to the Bathers Way is a fantastic addition enabling a 430 m boardwalk providing visitors with a range of options for enjoying the walk. The Bathers Way, the 6 km stretch of coast from Nobbys Beach in the north to Merewether Beach in the south, is being progressively transformed as part of Newcastle City Council's coastal revitalisation program.

FORT SCRATCHLEY (Walking required)

Fort Scratchley was formerly a coastal defence installation, now an interactive museum. It was built in 1882 to defend the city against a possible Russian attack. However, its guns were not fired in anger until 8 June 1942, during the shelling of Newcastle by a Japanese submarine.

The Australian Army vacated the site in 1972. The Fort is under constant restoration by a team of volunteers.
